Eating vegetables raw usually means that you get the nutrients, but old people and children or those suffering from certain stomach disorders, may not be able to digest them easily. Carrots are best eaten lightly cooked. Cooking breaks down the tough cellular walls, making beta-carotene more available for absorption by the body.

Carrots are an excellent source of beta-carotene, the plant form of Vitamin A. One of the first symptoms of rarely occurring Vitamin A deficiency is "night blindness" – the inability of the eyes to adjust to dim lighting or darkness. Vitamin A combines with a protein in the retina to form visual purple, a substance in the eye which is needed for night vision. If you are deficient in Vitamin A, just one carrot a day should be enough to improve your night vision.

Artificial supplements are no substitute for good eating habits and most people will meet all their vitamin and mineral requirements by following a balanced diet. However a few people do need supplements. Pregnant women need folic acid; the elderly might require vitamin D and iron; and people with osteoporosis are often prescribed extra calcium.

- a. How should vegetables be eaten?
- b. Deficiency of Vitamin A causes.....
- c. According to the writer, Carrots.....
- d. How does a person get the nutrients?
- e. How can we avoid “night blindness”?
